Schuster Jachetti LLP Expands Personal Injury Resources

September 14, 2026

WILMINGTON, DE - September 14, 2026 -
Schuster Jachetti LLP has expanded its personal injury information resources in 2026 while maintaining four Delaware offices, including its primary office in Wilmington, to organize information concerning accident claims, workers? compensation, medical malpractice, premises liability, and related civil proceedings. The update provides a central reference for information about Delaware injury law, filing procedures, insurance issues, and the stages commonly involved in civil claims.

?The expanded materials organize information about the legal and procedural issues that arise across different types of injury matters in Delaware,? said Ken Schuster, Esq., founding member of Schuster Jachetti LLP. ?The firm is continuing to develop resources that explain how those matters move from initial review through investigation, negotiation, and, when applicable, litigation.?

The firm?s personal injury resources address questions concerning filing deadlines, comparative negligence, damages, insurance claims, wrongful death, workers? compensation, and premises liability. The library also groups information according to practice areas, including motor vehicle accidents, construction accidents, medical malpractice, catastrophic injuries, and other civil matters.

Personal injury litigation generally examines whether a party owed a legal duty, whether that duty was breached, whether the breach caused an injury, and what damages resulted. The evidence reviewed in a particular matter can include medical records, accident reports, photographs, witness statements, insurance documents, employment records, expert findings, and other materials connected with the circumstances of the incident.

Motor vehicle matters represent one category addressed through the firm?s materials. These cases can involve automobiles, trucks, motorcycles, commercial vehicles, pedestrians, or other road users, and the legal analysis can include questions involving negligence, insurance coverage, causation, medical treatment, and damages. Delaware law and the applicable insurance policies determine the procedures and requirements that apply to an individual matter.

The resource library also covers premises liability and workplace injury matters. Premises claims can involve questions concerning property conditions, maintenance, notice, and responsibility for an alleged hazard, while workplace injuries can involve separate workers? compensation procedures and administrative requirements. A single incident can sometimes raise issues under more than one legal or insurance framework, depending on the facts.

Medical malpractice claims involve additional procedural and evidentiary considerations. Records concerning diagnosis, treatment, professional standards, causation, and damages can become part of the review, and expert analysis can be relevant to questions involving professional conduct. Delaware statutes and court rules establish requirements that differ from those governing ordinary negligence matters.

Schuster Jachetti LLP also publishes information concerning the stages of an injury claim. An initial review can be followed by evidence preservation, investigation, communication with insurers or other parties, negotiation, and civil litigation when a dispute is not resolved through earlier procedures. Pleadings, discovery, motions, depositions, expert testimony, settlement proceedings, and trial can become part of a litigated matter.

The firm operates four Delaware offices in Wilmington, Smyrna, Georgetown, and Lewes. Its office information identifies the Wilmington location at 3407 Lancaster Pike as the primary office and places the firm?s additional locations in Kent and Sussex counties. The multi-office structure gives the firm physical locations across all three Delaware counties.

Ken Schuster has practiced civil litigation for more than 35 years and has been identified as a founding member of Schuster Jachetti LLP. His practice background includes vehicle accidents, defective-product matters, premises claims, medical malpractice, workplace accidents, and commercial disputes. Schuster has also been associated with the firm?s Delaware practice and its Wilmington office.

Schuster Jachetti LLP?s official website identifies personal injury, auto accidents, workers? compensation, construction accidents, medical malpractice, catastrophic injuries, premises liability, and wrongful death among the matters addressed by the Delaware practice. The website states that its published materials provide general legal information and do not constitute individualized legal advice.

The 2026 resource expansion gives Schuster Jachetti LLP an updated informational framework for addressing multiple categories of Delaware personal injury law. The firm continues to maintain and publish materials concerning civil procedure, insurance issues, filing requirements, evidence, and other subjects associated with injury claims.
